Dear Piano Teacher,

When I was a young boy studying the piano, I took great pleasure in playing pop, jazz, Broadway, movie music... songs of all kinds. I also had the opportunity to play a special solo at church once in awhile. I would buy the standard sheet music and work very hard at creating my own piano solo arrangement. There were not a lot of popular piano arrangements available at that time, but when I could find them, I'd study the writing carefully. Although I was serious about playing traditional piano literature throughout my school years, I always enjoyed keeping a popular arrangement in my repertoire.

I studied composition as a university student, learning the art of writing for myriad ensembles and situations. This experience is an important component in arranging for the piano. I believe that every note counts, every voice leads somewhere. Over the years I have had the opportunity to write for a variety of skill levels, learning through experience what is pedagogically appropriate for the developing pianist. I always strive to write arrangements that "play easy but sound hard," giving attention to every detail so that the player has a smooth, rewarding experience in bringing the piece to life.

So, when the folks at Hal Leonard asked me to create a series of collections of piano arrangements, I dove into the project with enthusiasm. There are students who may be inspired to continue their piano studies when given the chance to play a melody they've heard on the radio, or a song sung at school or church. There are accomplished pianists who can use a pop arrangement for a special occasion (or even a quiet moment alone at the piano). There are church pianists who are looking for just the right solo. I hope this series will provide quality material for all of these needs!

Sincerely,

Phillip Keveren
